

Learn To Kayak In The UK This Summer

What could be better than a nice British summer's day spent on the river? With the weather warming up nicely at the moment it has to be the ideal time to learn to kayak. Imagine it..... a beautiful warm balmy day, the morning spent learning to kayak and then the afternoon spent out on the river with top UK instructors helping you every step of the way.

This doesn't have to be an individual activity either; you can get the whole family involved including the children. There are many places throughout the UK where you can learn this activity but probably none better than on the River Wye in Herefordshire and Gloucestershire. One particular area is Symonds Yat which is right beside the River Wye, this is an area of outstanding natural beauty which many people flock to each year to take in the stunning views and activities on offer.

When visiting the area be sure to choose a facility with the highest qualified instructors on offer because this way you will be sure to have the best possible learning experience but also done very safely.

For beginners the River Wye is clean and safe with areas of low current so you can enjoy gently paddling away and then taking in the beautiful scenery while you gently drift back. If you want your experience to be a completely dry one for the family then two kayaks can be strapped together to offer maximum stability.

There are many types of canoes and kayaks available to hire depending on your requirements, group size and experience. If you choose a single person canoe or kayak the capsizing drill will need to be taught to maintain safety at all times.

The canoes and kayaks have waterproof compartments built into them so that picnics can be taken along with you which is ideal for a riverside break. There are also various pubs and hotels nearby which are ideal for a spot of lunch ready to get back on the river again.

Transportation can be provided from various points along the River Wye, so if you have paddled away down the river and do not want to paddle back you can easily be transported back by your instructor team.

Why not try something new this summer and learn to kayak and canoe on the River Wye, it can be a day's activity or a holiday break. The area is such a beautiful one you will not want to leave.
